The culture of British nation

As every nation has its own unique ways to celebrate festivals, it is also not hard to distinguish British nation among them because of its multifarious, colorful and fascinating traditions

British people are rich with their celebrations and festivals where we can experience their culture and customs. Most of their celebrations came from Christianity or historical events. For instance, Pancake day is celebrated on the last day before Lent begins. As it is a Christian custom to fast during Lent, this fasting meant that most foods would go spoiled during this period. So the British decided to use the eggs, milk, and sugar they had and made pancakes. Today, although many people do not fast anymore, the tradition of making pancakes on this day remains.

And one of the wide celebrated holiday in the UK is Halloween. On that day people feel more vibrant and energetic. They spend hours to dress up, decorate their houses and streets where can give you a real atmosphere of Halloween. Even on social media or on the icons of your phone some logos and symbols of Halloween appear.

On other holidays such as Christmas, New Year Eve , people organize parades on the street and create magical atmosphere by using lights on the street and enjoy these holidays cooking the special dishes of each holiday. And this tradition is being kept from generation to generation. I'm sure that it is kind of treasure of the UK

To sum up, it is my firm belief that these kind of traditions of every nation play major role to make their youngsters recognize themselves truly. And it helps us not to mix them but differentiate the nations one another.
