

COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS OF TRAVELLING IN UZBEK AND ENGLISH NATIONS

Ro'ziyeva Umida Abruyqul kizi

Teacher of Samarkand State Institute of Foreign Languages

Narpay faculty of Foreign Languages

roziyeva.umida@yandex.ru

Toxirov Feruzbek

Teacher of Samarkand State Institute of Foreign Languages

Narpay faculty of Foreign Languages

Abstract

This article explores the rich cultural diversity of common aspects about travelling from both Uzbek and English, with a particular emphasis on this notion concerning not as only a tourist but also as a hostess. This article offers particular perspectives into the principles, beliefs, and cultural peculiarities of a community since they are statements of collective knowledge. Through an examination of “travel” notion and general beliefs in these languages, this article looks at how these manners represent the traits, behaviors and symbolism of travelling, comparing and contrasting their attitudes towards this topic

Key words: barriers, infrastructure, broaden, hospitality, accustomed, showcasing, picturesque, helpfulness,

Introduction

An increasingly world, travel has emerged as a powerful for cultural exchange, fostering deeper understanding and appreciation of diverse societies. While traveling, they discover new impressions, and they encounter new languages, traditions, and ways of life. One fascinating exploration lies in uncovering the cultural perspectives of different nations. According to cultural perspectives language serves as a fundamental tool for cultural exchange and understanding each other.

Perspectives towards Travelling from English and Uzbek people

English travelers often benefit from their native languages and global dominance, and it allows them to communicate effectively in many parts of the world. Their linguistic advantage opens doors to local interactions, facilitates immersion in new cultures, and encourages deeper engagement with the communities they encounter. In terms of Uzbek nations, Uzbek travelers may face language barriers when they are in the homeland. Exploring foreign lands necessitates an effort to bridge the communication gap through language learning or relying on translation services. These experiences shape the way travelers approach their interactions and influence their cultural perspective. The historical backgrounds of English and Uzbek cultures significantly impact their perspectives on their travel. English travelers often carry with them a sense of exploration inherited from their nation's stories past. In contrast, Uzbek travelers draw upon their nation's rich historical legacy as the crossroads of the Silk Road. The ancient cities are like Samarkand and Bukhara, with their stunning architecture and Islamic art. In England, transportation infrastructure is well-developed, with an extensive network of trains, buses, and underground systems. Travelers can easily navigate the country using public transportation. In Uzbekistan, while major cities have a public transportation system, traveling between cities often involves long-distance buses, shared taxis, or domestic flights. The visa requirements for England and Uzbekistan can differ depending on the travelers' nationality. England is a part of the United Kingdom, and visitors from many countries can enter for tourism purposes without a visa or may be eligible for a program. Uzbekistan typically requires a visa for most travelers, although it has introduced e-visas and visa-free entry for citizens of certain countries to promote tourism.

One similar cultural perspective on traveling between English and Uzbek nations is the value placed on learning and education through travel experiences. Both cultures see travel as an opportunity to gain new knowledge, broaden perspectives, and learn about different ways of life. Traveling is viewed as a form of personal enrichment and a way to expand one's understanding of the world.

Additionally, both English and Uzbek cultures appreciate the importance of hospitality and welcoming visitors. In both cultures, travelers are often welcomed with open arms and treated with kindness and generosity. There is a shared belief in the importance of showing respect and hospitality to guests, whether they are family members or strangers. Furthermore, both English and Uzbek cultures have a deep appreciation for nature and the outdoors. Travelers from both nations may seek out opportunities to explore natural landscapes, go hiking or camping, and engage in outdoor activities during their travels. There is a shared love for nature and a desire to connect with the environment through travel experiences.

Both England and Uzbekistan offer diverse landscapes and natural beauty for travelers to enjoy. England features picturesque countryside, national parks, coastal areas, and charming villages. Uzbekistan is known for its desert landscapes, mountain ranges, and pristine lakes. Both countries provide opportunities for outdoor activities, such as hiking, cycling, and exploring nature reserves.

Attitudes towards traveling as a hostess:

It's important to remember that while there may be some similarities in cultural perspectives on traveling between England and Uzbekistan, each country has its own unique characteristics and experiences to offer visitors. In terms of the English, they are generally known for their hospitality and welcoming nature towards travelers like the Uzbek. When Uzbek travelers visit England, they can expect a warm reception and friendly interactions with the local population. Besides, they are accustomed to hosting visitors from various backgrounds. Moreover, England offers a wide range of options to suit different preferences and budgets. Travelers can choose from luxury hotels, cozy beds, and breakfast establishments, budget-friendly hotels, or even opt for homestays to experience more personalized hospitality. English hospitality providers strive to ensure that guests feel comfortable and have an enjoyable stay. English people are generally open-minded and curious about different cultures, so Uzbek travelers may find locals interested in learning about their customs, traditions, and experiences. The tourism industry in England is well-developed, and there are numerous information centers, tourist offices, and online resources available to assist travelers in navigating the country. Additionally, Uzbek people are also known for their warm hospitality and welcoming nature towards travelers. In contrast, hospitality is deeply ingrained in Uzbek culture, and visitors are often treated with great respect and kindness. When English travelers visit Uzbekistan, they can expect to be greeted with genuine warmth and hospitality. Uzbeks are known for their generous and hospitable nature, and they often go out of their way to make guests feel comfortable and well taken care of. In addition to personal interactions, Uzbeks are also known for their helpfulness towards travelers. Locals are often eager to assist with directions, recommendations for places to visit, or any other assistance that English travelers may require.

Conclusion

In conclusion, this comparative analysis of traveling in Uzbek and English nations has highlighted the cultural diversity and shared values that both countries hold towards travel. While there are differences in language, historical background, transportation infrastructure, and visa requirements, there are also similarities in the value placed on learning through travel experiences, the appreciation for hospitality towards visitors, and the love for nature and the outdoors. Both English and Uzbek cultures offer unique and enriching travel experiences for visitors, showcasing their rich histories, stunning landscapes, and warm hospitality. Overall, traveling in both countries provides an opportunity for mutual understanding and cultural exchange, ultimately fostering deeper connections between people from different backgrounds. Through exploring the perspectives and attitudes towards traveling as both a tourist and a hostess, we can appreciate the beauty and diversity of our world and the shared humanity that unites us all.